

Don't Send Him Out To the Laundromat

By Count Marco

Recently a man complained to me over drinks about his unreasonable wife. Then he threw in another complaint—selfish women in coin laundries.

He was doing the family wash in one of those places recently and after the clothes had dried he sought one of the tables to fold the clothes.

Unfortunately, all three tables were taken up, two occupied with the stretched-out, Capricorn bodies of a couple of female customers. They refused to move when he asked them politely if he could use the tables to fold his laundry.

When he got home his wife, instead of being appreciative, complained loudly and violently because he brought back wrinkled clothes. She refused to accept his explanation, saying that he should have taken action—like calling the management or the police or punching the women in the nose.

He defended himself weakly by saying that if they had been men he would have taken to violence, but because they were women he restrained himself, as any gentleman would do.

His wife insisted they didn't act like women, and he should have hit away, anyway. Does this wife think she was acting like a woman? Hah! She should have been grateful that he came home at all after being subjected to such shame and indignities.

No woman would even suggest, let alone permit, the husband to demean himself by doing the laundry, especially in public. Mon Dieu! You American wives, have you no limits?

Does no one in this country have any pride any more? Must I battle for your sake all by myself? How often am I struck dumb witnessing poor mistreated beasts having to sort soiled clothes, dump them in machines, and waste valuable time sitting there waiting for the washing to be done.

To be told, on top of all these indignities, that he didn't fold them (due to conditions beyond his control) is indeed a revolting development between the sexes. Never expect your beast to do anything that you yourself can do; and if you can do it, then do it without dragging him down from his position as man.

Pray tell, what in the world can be so time-absorbing you yourself can't trek to the public laundry and do your own clothes?

You will not be able to satisfy me with one single reason except serious illness of a prolonged nature—and that I will accept with reservations, knowing how some of you fake illness to get out of doing your chores.

Laundries, whether the public automatic type or at home, are strictly the woman's domain, and never the man shall enter.

I have no sympathy for either party permitting this sort of emasculation. In final fact, it should have been the man who had his nose punched by the women for invading their private world of soap suds and bleach.

Bachelors excepted, of course. (Distributed by Chronicle Features)

Instruments Sought for Junior Blind

The Foundation for the Junior Blind, which operates a year-round program of recreation and education for more than 500 blind children in Southern California, is in need of musical instruments.

Music teachers have volunteered their services to teach the children the various instruments, but there is a particular shortage of clarinets, saxophones, trumpets, trombones, a bass horn, drums and guitars according to Norman Kaplan, executive director of the non-profit organization.

Persons with a musical instrument to donate may send it to the Foundation for the Junior Blind, 4005 Wilshire Blvd., Los Angeles 5, or phone DU'nkirk 5-4411 collect.
